

Ryan Derfler is Director of Experience (CX) at Geneva Global, an international philanthropic consulting firm. His career at the cross-section of social services (doing good) and entrepreneurship (doing well) includes stints at Cityteam International, and building a social enterprise for the City of Philadelphia. He has orchestrated hundreds of events including international leadership summits, NASCAR trackside hospitality, a series of hackathon's in Silicon Valley, and dozens of other town hall meetings and charity fundraisers.

Ryan serves as a storyteller, connector, and activator in the area of "Hands On Christianity," that is, living one's faith in practical ways that lead to discipleship. He maintains a blog that documents miracles and lessons learned chasing the Holy Spirit. He's published over a hundred articles and videos and he has spoken to numerous academic, corporate, and church groups such as Comcast, Wells-Fargo, Stanford Faculty Club, Alma Heights Christian School, and St. Timothy's Church in San Jose, CA.

Ryan was educated at Lebanon Valley College in business, philosophy, and art, including study abroad at The University per Stranieri in Perugia, Italy. He has also taken many post-graduate courses in an array of topics such as gamification, developing Innovative Ideas, and Human-Centered Design. He lives in Philadelphia, PA where he raises two children with his wife Whitney. He also leads a parallel life as an actor and model, appearing in advertisements around the world for brands such as Ralph Lauren, Bank of America, QVC, and NASCAR. He also enjoys promoting Philadelphia arts and culture.

For more, see www.ryanderfler.com